FROM THE DESK OF OUR PRESIDENT

Well, another great Industry Event is in the books! (see below). Participants came away with some good ideas from a great lineup of speakers, and some excellent networking with other shops. This is the third Industry Event that we have held in different areas around the state. All have been very informative and the feedback that we receive is very good. However, I can't help but wonder how we can get more participation at these events. At WCRP, we receive many calls from member and non-member shops that are frustrated with ______ (fill in the blank), and are looking for advice and direction. These events are a gold mine of information and ideas from other members that have had the same issue and what has worked for them, and this latest event was no exception. For more on this, please see the Guest Editorial below....

GUEST EDITORIAL

What strengthens you, continues to divide us.

Allow me to explain. I've recently attended a number of industry events. All wellorganized, with information well presented. The shop attendance? Less than ideal. So I dove a little deeper into the "why so few?" I made some calls...It's troubling that so many shops continue to exist on an island of their own choosing. Too busy and too fearful of sharing anything with a perceived competitor (including a room). My conversing with other shops has created ideas and profits far beyond what I could conjure up on my own.

"Whatever comes out of these gates, we've got a better chance at survival if we work together. Do you understand? We stay together, we survive." General Maximus Decimus Meridius

This industry has always required a unique set of skills and personalities. One of those traits, our self-reliance, is too easily combined with our innate competitive nature. The result is what we have...A fractured industry with less than ideal collaboration.

In battle and in nature, the enemy always divides to conquer. It's a proven formula 10,000 years old. We've divided ourselves by that self-reliance and the fear of competition. It's really far past time we put those concerns aside and come together to address the important topics that challenge this industry.

I really hope you can make the next industry event. Regardless of sponsor(s) or whomever will be attending. Your perceived competitor is not the enemy. On the list of foes competition is a bit down the list. We have bigger issues to address.

See you around? Steve

2023 SkillsUSA State Championship was April 25th-26th

Each year the WATDA Foundation hosts the SkillsUSA automotive state championships and assist with the diesel and collision repair competition state championships. All Wisconsin gold medal winning students advance to the SkillsUSA National Competition to compete against other gold medal winning students from the other 49 states. Ultimately, national gold medal winning students can advance to the World Skills competition. The last time a Wisconsin student advanced to the global stage (from Racine Park High School) was the 2015 Leipzig, Germany competition.

Uniting dealerships and industry from across Wisconsin, the automotive championships is comprised of 12 ASE aligned stations. These stations help prepare students for what they should know and be able to do to be successful. #### How to Hire and Retain Employees Feb. 28, 2023 Recruiting never stops, even when you're fully staffed. Chase Clough

As a shop owner, you know the importance of working with the best team possible. The employees you have can be the difference between dysfunction and record profits. So, the question is, how do you draw in the employees that are best for your business? How do you keep them on your staff? The first thing you need to know is where to look. Then you must remember that recruiting never stops, even when fully staffed. Once you've got a team that works, you must show them you value them. Travis Sallee, the second-generation owner of Loren's Auto Repair in Kalispell, Mont., has been in business for 38 years. With an entire team of 11 employees, he has advice on building your dream team and reaching record success.

The first step in hiring is knowing where to look for employees. If you're only using one avenue to find potential hires, you limit yourself to a small pool of people. As someone who grew up in a shop and has owned a shop for over a decade, Sallee says, "a simple Craigslist ad would have been more than sufficient in the past, but not anymore." In 2023, however, neither Craigslist nor Facebook was turning out the talent he wanted. So, he added Indeed. He says, "it was a pond I hadn't fished in yet, and it produced more than a dozen qualified candidates." When you open up your hiring avenues, you can find the top talent you wouldn't encounter otherwise.

OEM PARTS ENDORSEMENTS/RIDERS

You are highly encouraged to suggest purchasing optional OEM parts endorsements/riders to your repair customers through their insurance companies. Not all insurance companies offer this benefit, so they may need to shop around, but it most likely would be worth it to them to experience no arguments about getting all OEM parts to repair their vehicles when available!

Reader's Choice: Why Don't Insurers Pay the Prevailing Rate?

If in the past insurance companies would only pay the prevailing rate, then why do they not have to pay the prevailing rate now, since the prevailing rate went up?

By Barrett Smith April 13, 2023

Question asked by: Georgia Allen, Wayne's Restoration, Tulsa, Okla.

This is a good question and one many have asked over the past several decades. I suppose the first thing to know to answer your question is just what is a "prevailing rate"? My answer, based on my years of research in providing expert assistance in litigation matters and helping repairers and consumers, is that there is no prevailing rate unless it is the repairer's standard rate or that desired to pay by insurers.

In performing surveys and interviews with many service providers, I've found there is a range of prevailing rates, and they're based upon several things, including business methodologies, desired market positioning and competitive business constraints.

From your question, I would wager that your company is a participant in one or more direct-repair programs (DRPs) and, as such, is fearful of pushing back against what the insurer determines and dictates as its prevailing rate because you risk being removed from the program. If this is the case, you're not alone. Many repairers find themselves in the same less-than-favorable position.

OEM Electronic Parts Catalogues

DEG has made recent updates to its Electronic Parts Catalogue resource page with additional manufactures links to OEM parts schematics. In addition to the OEM websites listed, we've included partslink24 which has become a useful tool for DEG validation, and provides repairers the ability to look up the same OEM electronic parts catalogues from major European automakers (Audi, BMW, JLR, Polestar, Volvo, Porsche, VW). The online catalog provides a VIN decode that helps with correct part pricing and part numbers including any supersessions.
